Academic Credit

<http://internationalcenter.umich.edu/swt/study/options-for-academic-credit.html>

There are many opportunities for students that are looking to study abroad and would like to receive academic credit. The process for obtaining credit varies depending on whether or not the student goes through a U-M study abroad program or a program not affiliated with the University of Michigan.

Non-UM Study Abroad (Transfer Credit)

Students must go through a specific process in order to make sure credits will transfer from a non-UM program. Additional steps must be taken to see if credits will count towards a concentration or minor. The process should be completed before students leave for study abroad to gain full credit. Below are the recommended steps in the process.

1. Find out whether credit from the program will be transferred into credit at the University of Michigan and what degree requirements the credit may be used for

Go to the LSA Academic Advising Center and speak to an LSA Advisor. Bring the class name and any information about the course with you. Advisors can tell if the credit will count as transfer credit at UM

Students should see what courses they need to take in order to fulfill distribution requirements and gain valuable information about their degree progress and completion

See the database of previously accepted courses from various abroad programs. Students are to search for the program they are going on and then find the class they want to take. If the class is there, they can see whether or not it was accepted as transfer credit by UM in the past. If the class is not listed, then students fill out the Transfer Credit Evaluation form. This form acts a pre-evaluation form for the course. UM will decide within a few weeks whether or not the class will count.

Fill out a pre-evaluation form for a course if necessary. This is an online form that will be sent to the Office of Undergraduate Admissions Transfer Credit Evaluation Office.

Note: Students in other U-M schools and colleges will need to see academic advisors within their respective school or college.

2. Find out if credit can be transferred to a specific concentration or minor

Contact the concentration advisor to have the courses pre-approved

Be clear to say whether or not the program is sponsored by U-M or is an outside program

Bring any materials and or information about the course to the advisor for pre-approval. Note: many study abroad programs post course syllabi online

Some departments require an additional review of the course when students return so it is suggested to keep coursework and syllabi

Note: Many U-M departments place a cap on the number of hours of transfer credit allowed to count towards the major. Transfer students should also check with their academic advisors to ensure that they have not already transferred in the maximum amount of credits allowed by their school/college. For LSA, the maximum is 60 credits.

3. Submit an official transcript after the student returns

Types of Study Abroad Programs

<http://internationalcenter.umich.edu/swt/study/types-of-study-abroad-programs.html>

Non-UM Study Abroad Through Other U.S. Sponsored Programs: Transfer Credit

Other universities and programs provide study abroad opportunities. Outside programs can sometimes be less expensive, can provide opportunities in different countries, and offer more diverse areas of study; some programs combine study abroad with internships and or service learning opportunities. All credit earned from a non-UM program will be transfer credit; credit can still count towards a U-M degree with proper approval. U-M scholarships and financial aid typically will not transfer to non-UM programs. For students that receive aid, consult the Office of Financial Aid to learn how studying on a non-UM program will affect your package.

Direct Enrollment in Overseas Universities: U-M and Non-U-M

Direct enrollment means that students will be directly enrolled into another university. Credit transfer is similar to US sponsored study abroad programs; however, academic systems differ around the world so it is important to check with U-M Academic Advising to ensure credit will transfer. Students are required to find their own housing and be responsible for their own travels. This option is easier in English speaking countries. There are also universities with services directed towards short term enrollment students. This information is often available through the international student office at the foreign university.
